All is not Gold that Glitters. There is no article of merchandize in which the inexpert are so liable to be deceived in purchasing, as in the line of watches, gold and silver ware, and jewel-ry, for there is no line of trade in which people who know nothing about the in-trinsic value of the article offered are obliged to depend so much upon the representations of salesmen as in this. One would supcose where there were so many respectable and reliable jewelry stores as there are in the city, no one would be foolish enough to buy of these itinerant, perambulating pedulers or Peter Funk auctioneers. In nine cases out of ten the purchaser pays more for an imitation article than the genuine would cost, but only finds out how much be has been cheated when it is to late to obtain redress. An instance of this kind came under our notice a few days since where a lady purchased at would suppose where there were so many a few days since where a lady purchased at a "great (?) sale of bankrupt stock" what is was claimed by the auctioneers to be "fine, triple silver plate caster, with cut glass totales," for which she paid $7, but which proved upon investigation to be of the cheapest of metal, and only washed with a silvering solution, and worth about 75c. The genuine article could have been bought at Duhme's or Kent's, or any other first class house for $3 or $5. Such casses cour every day, and the wonder is that it is s. During the present month there will be many strangers in the city, most of whom will be glad to carry away with them some souvenir of their visit in the shape of jew-eiry, in one form or another, and we are doing this class a favor in recommending a reliable house to deal with. The old established firm of Luke Kent & Co. has lately ABOUT MEXICO.

What General Grant Thinks of the Country and People,

[Chicago Inter-Ocean.] There was an interested circle of listen ers about General Grant the other night of sympathy. Mr. Tilden made his se-while he was giving some facts about lections, after changing his mind a good cheerfully consenting thereto. The talk was entirely informal, the General frequently being interrupted by questions, but many facts were revealed which will prove interesting to the public.

"There are nine millions of people in Mexico," said General Grant, "and seven millions of them are industrious, frugal and willing to work for even a pittance, if afforded the opportunity."

"What opportunity do they need?" interposed a listener,

"Well, what they first require is com munication with the outside world. They ought to build railroad from the frontier to the interior of the country, and thus afford a means of transporting their products cheaply and quickly to a market. Vera Cruz has a railroad going up to Orizaba, Mexico, via Cordova and Orizaba, otherwise they could not get a market for anything they produce. Everybody was formerly idle. Now they are raising sugar, tobacco, and coffee, and extending the raising of these products all the time. Then, there is a branch road from near Vera Cruz, that runs to Jalapa. So they have 40 or 50 miles across there where they are producing these products, and it is mrking a conservative, well-to-do population. They are making coffee for 6 cents a pound cost to the purchaser." "Mexico will soon have a new railroad outlet on this side, I suppose—the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe?" said one of the gentlemen.

"Yes; and it will go through to the City of Mexico, as well as have a line over the Pacific. It will be a wonderful thing for Mexico. Now, they have a party there that is very much opposed to any connection with the United States, on the ground that they are afraid of usafraid that we will want to take territory. They have people among them, as follows: you know, who are a little anxious to set No. 322. up a separate Government in the North, with a view of turning it over to the United States, and, of course, making dollars. something out of it, and they are afraid $27.00 of them. I told these people that they need have no alarm whatever about our zags ra wanting any of their territory. We didn't. I told them that their apprehensions were, at one time, very well grounded, because the time was when we wanted Southern territory; that we had the institution of slavery in our country, which was limited to one section of country, and which was always jealous of the political power of the North, and always sought more territory in which it could extend slavery, so as to give political influence in the Government. As long as that institution existed there was a strong party here that was determined to keep possession of the Government, and was always trying to get more slave States. But now, I reminded them, the institution of slavery was at an end, and the very people who wanted the territory then would not have it now; and I believe I represented the sentiments of my countrymen-nine-tenths of them-when I said that we would not accept it; that our desire was to sa them like ourselves a stable, prosperous Government; that we wanted to see them rival us, as far as they were capable of becoming rivala," "How about the Mexican General, those who do the work? How do they live?" "Well, the working classes, if they can get 25 cents a day, are in clover. You see, their families will raise a little patch of corn, and they will live almost exclusively on the tortilla, which they make from the corn product. They have aborers there where they are grading the railroads that get 25 to 40 cents a day in silver. "Their families will make tortilla, which is cooked by their wives at home. It is made of corn which is soaked in lye, and then it is worked down into a paste be-tween two stones very thin. They make cakes of it, and eight or ten pounds of corn in this way will keep a man a week. They raise that; the luxuries they do not have. When they work around the house they will raise a few to natoes and a few chickens and beans. But these they have only as luxuries." "Do they drink any liquors of any kind?" "After you get up to an elevation of 6,500 feet they make and drink 'pulka, produced from the megna plant. frink an enormous sight of it. It is realthy and about the color of milk, and if you are a little accustomed to it, it is quite palatable and very refreshing. You can buy it for about 2 cents a gallon. They are a very temperate eating and drinking class. There is an enormous amount of this preparation drank, because everybody drinks it. It is very profitable to raise at 2 cents a gallon. It is much like cocoanut milk, except in drinking you can feel a very slight sense of exhilaration."

Mr. John Conlon has a flower-stand at the northeast corner of Center Market and at this season of the year the neigh borhood blossoms out with callas, ros pinks, violets, ivy and every species of house and garden plant. Yesterday at noon trade was not very brisk, and Mr. Conlon was surprised and delighted when a coupe drove up at the curbstone and the coachman sprang down and assisted a very infirm old gentleman to alight. been succeeded by Mr. H. for his grounds in Gramercy Park. Though the advent of the defrauded President was soon noised about, it created no excitement, and the only emo-Conlon informed a World reporter that he delivered the flowers in person and at once received a check for the amount from Mr. Tilden himself.

Shortly after Mr. Conlon's return to Center Market a reporter of the World found him at his place of business and the following tolloquy ensued:
"I understand you had a visit from

Mr. Tilden to-day?" "Yes, sir; he came down about noon and bought some flowers." "Did his visit create any excitement?" "Oh, no, sir. Last year when he came there was a good many got round him; but to-day they didn't seem to mind him

"What sort of flowers did he purchase?" "Just common flowers, sir; roses and pinks and geraniums and fuchsias and such like. They're for the grounds around his house at Gramercy Park. Last year he had a real pretty garden. He put in a fountain and it was fixed up nice. But it looks very bad now. I don't see what he wants with flowers this summer. He's got two great big dogs there about that high (here Mr. Conlon indicated a height nearly up to his waist) and they'll tear everything to

"Mr. Tilden likes flowers, then?" "Yes. He buys them every year. Last year he got $200 worth. He used to buy them from me when he was nothing but a sort of lawyer down in Wall street, before he went into politics."

"Excuse the question, but how many did he buy to-day?" "Twenty-seven dollars' worth. Here's the check; you can see it for yourself." Mr. Conlon here took from his vest pocket and handed the reporter, with very evident pride, a check which read

"Only about sixty-seven, I believe." "Is that all, sir? I thought he was seventy five. Well, he's always worked hard and he's an old bachelor, too, and that's wearing, you know, sir.' How did he appear at the house?"
"Pretty well, sir, but a little shaky.

The servants say he's awful spry, and they can't get ahead of him any-he keeps a good watch on them. I guess that's true. Mr. Tilden looks like a retty old man, but he seems pretty sharp
